“There was a hint of chill in the October evenings. The days were still warm and golden, but at night they could feel frost in the air, an icy breath of the winter that was to come.

Harry, Ron, and Hermione were curled up in front of the fire in the Gryffindor common room. The warmth and the quiet murmuring sounds of the flames were making them comfortably drowsy. Even Hermione had let her book sink down into her lap for a moment and gazed dreamily into the fire.

Harry inhaled the spicy, woodsy scent of the burning hickory and tried to make out shapes in the fire. How many colors there were in the crackling flames! He had always thought of fire as orange; but now he noticed that the dancing flames had all kinds of hues; ocher, amber, shades of deep gold and flaming red, and now and then a flicker of an incandescent blue.

"I can see a pyramid," he mumbled sleepily. "See it? Right there, where the flames lick up a little higher?"

Ron leaned his head to one side, considering. "Nah," he declared finally. "It's not a pyramid at all - it's the Sorting Hat!"

Harry and Hermione laughed a little, but agreed willingly that there was something hat-shaped about the flickering flame.

"I'll never forget how nervous I was the day when we were sorted," said Hermione softly. "More than two years ago..."

"Me too," put in Ron. "I was sure it was going to put me in Slytherin!" He made a face. "My parents would have disowned me."

Harry smiled, but said nothing about his own fears on that day. Perhaps some other time... "I think we were all scared," he said quietly. Even Malfoy looked uncomfortable, and that pale little girl, Sally-Anne Perks, looked like she was going to faint..."

Hermione frowned. "Sally-Anne? Who's that?"

Harry looked at her curiously. "Sally-Anne Perks, the girl who was sorted right before me. She was sorted into Hufflepuff, remember?"

But the look of recollection and recognition he was waiting for never came. Hermione merely shook her head, baffled. "What are you talking about, Harry? There was no Sally-Anne."

Text 2:

"Who are you and what in the name of Merlin's beard are you talking about?"

Hello?

Hello. Who are you? Where is Ginny?

Ginny?

Yes Ginny.

Ginny Weasley?

Yes. Ginevra Molly Weasley. The owner of this diary.

This is Ginny's diary?

Yes. Why do you have it?

I found it. I didn't know who it belonged to and all the pages were blank.

Well now you know and you can return it immediately. Where is Ginny?

Well its 9pm so I expect she is in her dormitory.

Wonderful. You can return me first thing in the morning then.

Who am I talking to?

The diary.

How are you responding?

I'm enchanted to respond to my owner in order to offer advice.

I've never heard of that enchantment before.

That's because you're a child. I'm sure there is plenty you haven't heard of.

No...I don't believe that's it. Parchment can only be charmed to provide fairly basic pre set responses based on the instructions of the person charming it. If it were possible to charm it to the extent required to offer advice I would be aware of it.

Well...aren't you a clever one?

Yes. Why did you lie?

Who are you?

I'm Luna. Who are you?

My name is Tom and I'm getting very frustrated with you Luna. Give me back to Ginny.

No. I think I'll keep you for a while”

“Remus sighed as he shoved the key into the lock on the front door of his flat. The UWE Bristol students in the flat above his were having what sounded like another rager. It was a Friday night, so there was another rager. There was always another rager.

The late July air was balmy, even at half past two in the morning. Remus had just finished his eighth night in a row tending bar at the King’s Arms. This was the third King’s Arms Remus had worked in since the war ended, but it was the one he’d been at the longest. Eight months, he mused, as he shoved his door open with a creak of rusted hinges. He stepped over his own threshold, flicked on the switch that brought the dingy bulb in the sitting room to life, and let his keys clatter into the ceramic dish on the coffee table. That table and the threadbare couch into which Remus folded himself were the only pieces of furniture in the room, and he propped his boots up onto the table’s scuffed wooden surface with a sigh. The joints in his spine were beginning to ache again; he only had three days until the next full moon.

Two days, he realized with a jolt, as his gaze fell to the calendar tacked up on the wall next to the kitchen door. It was past midnight. July thirty-first”
